Cow and Chicken! Cow and Chicken! Please publish more Cow and Chicken! I first found out about Cow and Chicken in your "Holy Cow—A Free Cartoon Network Comic!" and I fell in love. I try to buy all the CARTOON NETWORK books, but any with Cow and Chicken are a magnet to my spending money. If Cow and Chicken ever get their own monthly or even bimonthly book, I would be an instant subscriber. Not since Pinky and the Brain have I felt this way. (I subscribed to PINKY AND THE BRAIN, but now unfortunately and heartbreakingly their book has been canceled.) I shall cherish the memories. Cow and Chicken were published in CNP #10 May '98 and #14 October '98, and of course these two pieces of gold I already possess. Cow and Chicken! Cow and Chicken! Please publish more Cow and Chicken!

OK, I think we can handle that! In fact, we plan on doing as many Cow and Chicken issues for this book as possible! Look for their latest adventures in CARTOON NETWORK PRESENTS #19! (Oh, and as an added bonus to make your day, you can still find all-new "world-conquering" adventures of Pinky and the Brain—in the monthly ANIMANIACS FEATURING PINKY AND THE BRAIN comic, monthly from DC Comics!)

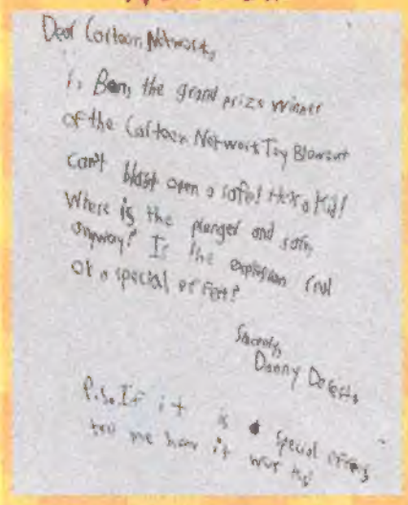
LETTER OF THE MONTH:



Dear Cartoon Network,
I'm Ben, the grand prize winner
of the Cartoon Network Toy Blowout Can't blast open a safe! He's a kid!
Where is the plunger and safe anyway? Is the explosion real or a special effect?
Sincerely,
Danny DeCosta
P.S. If it
you me how it was

from Danny Decosto
Brockton, Mass.

You're absolutely right, Danny—kids shouldn't blow things up. But luckily, like most of CARTOON NETWORK's commercials, it was made using animation drawn by artists (like the comic you're reading right now)! The artists videotaped Ben pretending to open the giant safe and then added the drawings of explosions on top of the film afterward! It's like cartoon magic!

Dear Sir/Madam:

I am hoping that you can help me. I am a big fan of Wacky Races and currently have copies of issues #7, #11, and #15 of CARTOON NETWORK PRESENTS. I would like to order any issues that I might have missed. I would really appreciate it if you could let me know how to obtain any back issues. I have visited several comic shops but they were unable to help me, therefore any assistance would be great. Thanks for your help.

Don't fret, Glen. Your collection of Wacky Races comics is complete! CARTOON NETWORK PRESENTS issues #7, #11, & #15 contain the entire Wacky Races Trilogy! But if you're a wacky kind of fan, you may also want to check out CNP #18, which contains Yogi and gang in Yogi's Treasure Hunt-type adventures—plus CNP #22, our next issue!

See you next month!
